ABSTRACT

Part of urban space that contains crops, plants and vegetation is known as the Green Open Space (GOS). Several urban areas, with extensive changes and undeveloped land, require the City Green Open Space (CGOS), which can be a 'counterweight' to the diminishing condition of urban ecosystems. Urban green space requirement, seen from the perspective of sustainability, it turns uneven spreading pattern in each area of the city. The effort to increase green space is conducted through the local regulatory policies on the management of urban green space. The policy governs planning, implementation of development, maintenance, supervision and control as well as evaluation with the scope of green open space activities, both public and private. The existence of the policy is expected to provide support on the Urban Spatial Plan (RTRW), optimizing the arrangement of green space according to the characteristics of each region as well as improving the quality of urban environments.
