The purpose of this study was to determine the response of the leadership of private vocational education regarding the dimensions that influence it. This research is exploratory with the subject of private vocational education leaders. The data collection technique used a questionnaire which was analysed using descriptive analysis. This study found that human capital was included in the high category, meaning that the human capital possessed by vocational secondary education was good. Overall, the dimensions of human capital are in the high category, in terms of education, knowledge, competence and skills. The highest dimension of human capital is education, where all educators (teaching staff) have met the requirements of academic qualifications. Meanwhile, the lowest dimension is conceptual skills, in terms of determining concepts and steps to measure the success of school programs, creating a school-community relationship system and human relations skills in building teamwork, decision making, and mastery of methods, processes and procedures, as well as the techniques of learning activities in schools (Approx 163 words)
